
REVITALIZE AND THRIVE NOW

THE BECOMING

A 21-Day Emotional Healing & Reinvention Journey for the Midlife Woman

You are not broken. You are becoming.

EMPOWERED EDITION

by Dr. Lori Alexander

A Note From Dr. Lori

If you are holding this workbook, I want you to know something first. You are not late. You are not behind. You are not failing at the second half of your life. You are exactly where you were always going to be — at the edge of who you have been, and the beginning of who you are becoming. The fact that you are tired is not a malfunction. It is information. The exhaustion you carry into midlife is rarely about your schedule. It is about a self that was built for survival and has outgrown its assignment.

I built this workbook for the woman I was at 42, when I had everything I had been told to want and could not remember the last time I had felt like myself. The protocols had not failed her. The performance had. What she needed was not another reset. She needed a soft place to come undone, and a structure that would hold her while she did. That is what these 21 days are.

There is no right way to do this. There is only honest and unhurried. Give yourself fifteen minutes a morning, a candle, and the bravery to be unwitnessed. The rest is built in.

With love,

Dr. Lori Alexander

Founder, Revitalize and Thrive Now

HOW TO USE THIS WORKBOOK

Three Movements, Twenty-One Mornings

The Becoming is built in three weeks, each with its own emotional terrain.

Week 1 — Release

Lay down what is no longer yours to carry. Inventory the weight. Name the apologies. Honor the grief. Send the borrowed voices home.

Week 2 — Reclaim

Call back the pieces of you that were left in other rooms. The girl you were. The dreams you buried. The beauty, the pleasure, the friendship you have been needing.

Week 3 — Rise

Become the woman you are being invited into. Draft her identity statement. Build her rhythms. Speak her boundaries aloud. Anoint her on Day 21.

THE DAILY STRUCTURE

Each day contains four elements: a short teaching, a set of journal prompts, an embodiment practice, and an affirmation. You can complete a day in fifteen unhurried minutes. The seventh day of each week is a Becoming Ceremony — give yourself an hour, and on Day 7, plan to rest afterward.

WHAT YOU WILL NEED

A journal. A pen. A candle. A mirror. A quiet hour each morning, or the corner of an evening. Optional: a soft playlist, fresh flowers or eucalyptus, and a small ritual space that is yours alone.

ABOUT THIS EDITION

You are reading the Empowered Edition — written for the woman who wants depth without religious framing. A Sacred Edition with scripture, prayer, and prophetic declaration on every page is available separately for the faith-rooted reader. Same spine. Same depth. Same becoming. You choose the voice that meets you where you are.

A Quiet Vow

For the next twenty-one mornings, I promise to give myself the fifteen minutes I have been giving to everyone else. I will not perform. I will not edit. I will not apologize for the woman who comes up when I sit down. I will let her speak. I will let her cry. I will let her remember. And on Day 21, I will meet the woman I have been becoming, and I will not look away.

Signed

Date

DAY 0

Self-Witness Inventory

Before we begin, we take a single honest look at where you stand right now. No fixing. No judging. Just witnessing. You will return to these questions on Day 22 and notice what has shifted.

In one sentence each:

· On a scale of 1 to 10, how connected do I feel to myself today, and why?

· What is one word that describes how I have been moving through my days?

· What am I tired of carrying?

· What am I quietly hungry for?

· Who is the woman I am afraid I have become? Who is the woman I suspect I am underneath?

· What would change in my life if I no longer had to perform?

BEFORE WE BEGIN

Your Soft Space Setup

The Becoming asks very little of your environment, but the small touches matter. Build a corner of your home that says, the moment you sit down, that this is the place where you come back to yourself.

THE ESSENTIALS

- A chair, cushion, or bed-corner that is yours.
- A candle. The same one, every morning, if possible.
- Your journal and a pen that feels good in your hand.
- Water. Tea. Something warm.
- A blanket or wrap that signals: this is a soft hour.

THE OPTIONAL

- Fresh eucalyptus, a small vase of flowers, or a single stem you cut from the garden.
- An essential oil — lavender, frankincense, rose, neroli.
- A soft, instrumental playlist with no lyrics.
- A photograph of yourself at nine years old.
- A small dish for collecting note cards, permission slips, and affirmations as you write them.

When the space is set, sit down. Light the candle. Breathe in for four. Hold for four. Exhale for six. Begin on Day 1 when you are ready — tomorrow morning is a beautiful place to start.

WEEK 1

RELEASE

Laying down what is no longer mine to carry.

The Inventory of Invisible Weight

Before you can lay anything down, you have to name what you are carrying. Not the obvious things — the children, the job, the mortgage — but the weight underneath those: the unspoken contracts, the silent expectations, the roles you took on when no one was watching and never quite put down. Today is an honest accounting. Not to make you feel worse. To make you free.

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. List every role you fulfill in a typical week — mother, daughter, friend, colleague, partner, leader, caregiver, host, fixer, peacekeeper, decider. Don't stop until your list is uncomfortable.
2. Beside each role, write one thing that role costs you that no one sees.
3. Which role did you choose, and which one were you assigned?
4. Which role would the truest version of you set down today, if no one would punish her for it?

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Put your hand on your chest. Breathe in for four counts. Hold for four. Exhale for six. Repeat ten times. With each exhale, picture handing one of those roles to a chair across the room.

TODAY'S AFFIRMATION

"I am allowed to set down what was never mine to carry."

The Apologies You Stopped Hearing

Somewhere along the way, you started apologizing to everyone except yourself. For taking up space. For wanting more. For needing rest. For having an inner life that did not match your performance. Today, you will write down the apologies you owe yourself — and read them out loud. This is not melodrama. This is repair.

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. Write the apology you owe the version of you who said yes when she meant no.
2. Write the apology you owe your body for the years you treated it like a problem.
3. Write the apology you owe your dreams for letting them grow quiet.
4. Write the apology you owe your inner child for not protecting her sooner.
5. Read each one aloud. Notice what shifts.

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Stand in front of a mirror. Look yourself in the eye. Say each apology to your reflection. Tears are welcome.

TODAY'S AFFIRMATION

"I am the first person I owe an apology to. And I have already begun to make it right."

The Grief You Filed Away

Midlife is full of grief no one acknowledges. The version of you who never got to be an artist. The friendship that quietly ended. The marriage that ended too. The parent who is fading. The body that no longer responds the way it did. We file these under 'life' and keep moving. Today, we let them be what they are: grief. And grief, named, begins to move.

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. List five griefs you have never let yourself fully feel.
2. Beside each, write one sentence describing what it cost you to keep moving.
3. Choose one. Write it a letter, the way you would write to a friend you had lost touch with.
4. What does that grief still need from you?

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Light a candle for each grief. Sit with it for the length of one full song you choose. Let the candle burn down or blow it out — your choice.

TODAY'S AFFIRMATION

"What I have grieved has not weakened me. It has shaped me."

The Body That Has Been Asking

Your body has been speaking to you for a long time. The tight shoulders. The shallow breath. The hunger you skipped past. The exhaustion you medicated with one more cup of coffee. Today is the day you actually listen. Not to fix anything. Just to listen.

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. Where in your body do you carry the most tension? Describe it as if it were a guest in your home.
2. What is that tension trying to tell you?
3. What has your body been asking for that you keep postponing?
4. If your body could write you a letter today, what would the first three sentences say?

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Lie flat on the floor. Close your eyes. Scan from your scalp to your toes, slowly. At each region, ask, “What do you need me to know?” Listen for ten breaths before moving on.

TODAY’S AFFIRMATION

“My body is not the enemy. She is the messenger I have been ignoring.”

The Permission Slips You Kept Waiting For

Most of us spent the first forty years waiting for someone to tell us we were allowed. A teacher, a parent, a boss, a husband, a culture. Today, the waiting ends. You become the issuer of your own permission slips. And you sign them in ink.

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. List five things you have been quietly waiting for permission to do, be, want, or rest into.
2. For each one, write the permission slip in your own words. Begin with "I, [your full name], grant myself permission to..."
3. Sign each one. Date them.
4. Which one will you act on this week?

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Print or hand-write your permission slips on real paper. Place them on a mirror, your nightstand, or your altar where you will see them daily.

TODAY'S AFFIRMATION

"I am no longer waiting to be chosen, allowed, or invited. I am the chooser now."

The Voice That Is Not Yours

There is a voice in your head that has been narrating your life. It is harsh, exacting, and tireless. And here is the truth: it is not yours. It belongs to someone — a parent, a teacher, an early disappointment, a culture that taught you to be small. Today, we identify the source. And we send the voice home.

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. Write down the three most common critical thoughts you have about yourself.
2. Whose voice does each one actually sound like?
3. What was that person carrying when they spoke that way?
4. Write a sentence sending that voice home: “Thank you for trying to protect me. I no longer need this. You may go now.”

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Stand at an open window or door. Read your “you may go now” sentences aloud, three times each. Imagine them being carried out of the room.

TODAY’S AFFIRMATION

“The inner critic is a borrowed voice. I am rebuilding the one that is mine.”

Becoming Ceremony — The Laying Down

Today is sacred. Not because you have earned it, but because seven days of honest seeing is its own kind of holy. The first movement closes with a ritual: you will write what you are releasing, and you will let it go. Then you will rest. The seventh day was made for this.

THE CEREMONY

1. Light a candle. Choose music if you wish. Sit somewhere that feels like yours.
2. On a single sheet of paper, write a list titled “I am laying these down.”
3. Include everything from this week that you do not want to carry into Week 2.
4. Read the list aloud, slowly, ending each item with “I lay you down.”
5. Burn the paper safely, bury it in the earth, or release it into running water.
6. Sit in the silence for at least ten minutes after.
7. Rest. Do nothing else of consequence today. The work today is rest.

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Today the prompts ARE the practice. Move through them slowly. Do not rush the ceremony, and do not skip the rest.

TODAY'S AFFIRMATION

“What I have laid down does not get to follow me into who I am becoming.”

WEEK 2

RECLAIM

Calling back the pieces of me I left in other rooms.

The Girl You Were at Nine

She was somewhere around nine — that age where you still knew what you loved, before you started editing yourself for safety. Today, we write to her. Not to fix her. To tell her the things she needed to hear and never did.

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. Close your eyes and picture your 9-year-old self. What is she wearing? Where is she standing? What is she holding?
2. What did she love at nine that you have stopped doing?
3. What was she afraid of that you can now reassure her about?
4. Write her a letter. Begin: “Sweet girl, I need you to know...”
5. Sign it from the woman you have become.

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Find a photograph of yourself at that age. Frame it. Place it where you will see it every morning this week.

TODAY'S AFFIRMATION

“I am the woman my 9-year-old self was waiting for.”

The Dreams You Buried

Somewhere between 25 and 45, you let some dreams die because dreaming hurt. The book. The business. The art. The move. The version of you who was bold in ways the world had not yet rewarded. They are not dead. They are buried. And buried things can be reclaimed.

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. List every dream you remember letting die — practical or wild, big or small.
2. Star the three that still flicker in you when you read them.
3. For each starred dream, what would the first 1% of moving toward it look like this month?
4. What did believing in that dream cost you the first time? What would not believing in it cost you now?

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Choose one of your three starred dreams. Take one action toward it within 24 hours, no matter how small — open a document, send a text, register a domain, sign up for a class.

TODAY'S AFFIRMATION

“My dreams are not behind me. They are buried, not dead. And I am the one with the shovel.”

The Beauty That Is Already Yours

You have been waiting to feel beautiful again, as if it was a destination. But beauty is not a destination. It is a posture toward your own face. Today, you practice the posture.

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. Write ten things about your current body, face, and presence that are quietly stunning. No exceptions, no caveats, no “but.”
2. Which of these have you noticed before, and which surprised you to write?
3. What is one thing about your aging that, viewed honestly, is actually gorgeous?
4. What would change if you treated yourself as the most stunning woman in any room you walked into?

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Stand at a mirror in full light. Read your list of ten aloud, looking at yourself. Do not flinch.

TODAY'S AFFIRMATION

“I am not waiting to be beautiful. I am beautiful, and I am finally paying attention.”

The Money Story You Inherited

You did not pick your beliefs about money. You absorbed them — from a parent, a culture, a marriage, a faith tradition, an early scarcity. Some served you. Most did not. Today, we trace the script. Then we decide what stays.

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. What did your mother teach you, in words or in silence, about money?
2. What did your father?
3. What did your earliest experience of lack teach you that you still believe?
4. What is one inherited money rule you are ready to retire, and what will replace it?
5. What would you do if you trusted that money could be a partner instead of a problem?

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Write a new money creed in three sentences. Place it inside your wallet or near the device where you check your accounts.

TODAY'S AFFIRMATION

"I am rewriting the money story I inherited. The pen is finally in my hand."

The Pleasure You Outsourced

You spent years giving pleasure to other people — your children's joy, your partner's preferences, your clients' satisfaction. Today, we bring pleasure home. Not the big productions. The small, sensory, daily pleasures that belong to you alone.

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. List five sensory pleasures that are yours alone — taste, touch, sound, sight, smell.
2. Which of them have you stopped giving yourself, and why?
3. What is one pleasure you have always wanted to try and never have?
4. What would your week look like if you scheduled pleasure the way you schedule meetings?

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Choose one pleasure from your list. Schedule it on the calendar this week as if it were an appointment. Keep it.

TODAY'S AFFIRMATION

*"Pleasure is not the reward for finishing my list.
It is the architecture of a life worth finishing."*

The Friendship You Need to Become

Some of the most important relationships you will repair in midlife are not with other people. They are with yourself. Today, we write the friendship contract you wish someone had offered you. Then we offer it to ourselves.

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. What does the friend you have always needed do, say, and provide?
2. How does she speak to you in your hardest moments?
3. What does she refuse to let you believe about yourself?
4. Write the friendship contract in her voice — what she promises you, and what you promise her in return.
5. Sign it.

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Read the contract aloud to yourself in the mirror once a day for the next seven days.

TODAY'S AFFIRMATION

*"The friend I have been waiting for has arrived.
She lives in me."*

Becoming Ceremony — The Calling Back

Week 1 was about laying down. Week 2 was about gathering back what was already yours. Today, you call the pieces home. Out loud. By name. In front of a mirror. This is not affirmation theater. This is reclamation.

THE CEREMONY

1. Light a candle. Stand in front of a mirror. Take five slow breaths.
2. Begin: “I am calling home the pieces of me I left in other rooms.”
3. Speak the names of what you are calling back — your nine-year-old self, your dreams, your body, your pleasure, your money mind, your inner friend, anything else.
4. After each one, say: “Welcome home.”
5. End by placing both hands on your heart and saying: “I am complete.”
6. Sit in silence for at least ten minutes.

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Today the ceremony IS the practice. Allow at least 30 unhurried minutes for it.

TODAY’S AFFIRMATION

“‘Nothing I have called home will leave me again.’”

WEEK 3

RISE

Becoming the woman I am being invited into.

The Identity Statement

The world will keep handing you old labels — mother, wife, employee, daughter, the woman who is always ‘fine.’ Today you draft the one-sentence statement of who you actually are now. Not aspirational. Not someday. Now. You will refine it all week.

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. Begin with “I am a woman who...” and finish the sentence in twenty different ways. Write fast.
2. Read back through. Which three resonate hardest in your chest?
3. Combine them into a single sentence of no more than thirty words.
4. Read it aloud. Adjust until it makes you cry, smile, or both.
5. This is your working Identity Statement. You will refine it daily this week.

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Write it on a note card. Carry it with you. Read it before any hard conversation this week.

TODAY'S AFFIRMATION

“I no longer need to be introduced. I introduce myself now.”

The Boundaries That Protect the Becoming

Becoming who you are will make some people uncomfortable. That is not your problem to solve. Today, you map three relationships and the new terms you require — and you practice the conversations aloud, so when the moment comes, your voice does not shake.

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. Name three relationships, roles, or recurring dynamics that have been operating on old terms.
2. For each, complete: “The new term I require is...” Be specific.
3. Write the exact sentence you will say in each conversation. Begin: “Going forward, I need...”
4. What is your follow-through if the term is not honored?
5. What internal permission do you need to grant yourself in order to hold these terms?

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Practice each sentence aloud, three times — in the mirror, in the car. Until it feels like a sentence you can deliver without explanation or apology.

TODAY'S AFFIRMATION

“My boundaries are not punishments. They are the walls of the home I am building inside myself.”

The Rhythms of a Woman Returning to Herself

Becoming is not a sprint. It is a rhythm. Today, you design the rhythms of a sustainable inner life — morning, midweek, and Sabbath — so that what you are becoming has somewhere to live.

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. What does your ideal morning look like? Be specific. Time, light, drink, body, mind.
2. What is the midweek practice that resets you when you have lost the thread?
3. What is your Sabbath? Not the religious one — the one your soul actually needs.
4. What three habits, kept consistently, would change the next year of your life?
5. Where in your current week is the time for these rhythms already hiding?

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Draft a one-page weekly rhythm sheet — morning, midweek, Sabbath. Tape it inside a cabinet you open every day.

TODAY'S AFFIRMATION

"I am no longer performing wellness. I am living rhythms that sustain the woman I am becoming."

The Body as Ally, Not Project

Your body has been treated as a project, a problem, and a product for most of your adult life. Today, we offer her a new arrangement: ally. Not perfect. Not finished. Ally.

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. What three rituals — one for movement, one for nourishment, one for rest — would treat your body as ally?
2. What would you stop doing if you stopped treating your body as a project?
3. What does your body do beautifully that you never thank her for?
4. How would your eating change if every bite was an act of devotion instead of negotiation?
5. What is one piece of language you will retire from your inner dialogue about your body?

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Choose your three rituals. Schedule them into the next seven days. Do not move them.

TODAY'S AFFIRMATION

“My body is not a problem to fix. She is my home, my ally, and my oldest friend.”

The Money, Work, and Calling Alignment

Where your time and money go reveals what you actually believe about your becoming. Today, we audit. Not to shame. To realign.

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. Look at your last week. What percentage of your hours went toward what you say matters most?
2. Look at your last month of spending. What does it say about what you are actually building?
3. What is one expense you will cut this week that is not aligned?
4. What is one investment in your becoming you have been postponing?
5. If your work was a full expression of your calling, what would change first?

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Make one alignment move within 24 hours — cut, redirect, invest, or schedule. Do not wait for a perfect plan.

TODAY'S AFFIRMATION

“My hours and my dollars are voting for the woman I am becoming.”

The Legacy You Are Quietly Building

You are already building a legacy. Today is about whether it is the legacy you actually want. Write the eulogy you would want read at 90. Then live this week into it.

JOURNAL PROMPTS

1. Write the eulogy you would want read about you at 90 — three paragraphs.
2. What does the eulogy say about how you loved?
3. What does it say about what you built?
4. What does it say about how you showed up to your one wild life?
5. What is one thing in your eulogy that is not yet true, and what is the smallest step toward it this week?

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Read your eulogy aloud. Save it where you will return to it on hard days.

TODAY'S AFFIRMATION

“My legacy is not what I will be remembered for. It is who I become while I am still here.”

Becoming Ceremony — The Rising

Twenty-one days ago, you stood at the edge of your own life and decided to come back. Today is the rising. Not because the work is done — it never is — but because you are no longer who you were. Mark it.

THE CEREMONY

1. Prepare your space. Light candles. Choose music. Wear something that feels like the woman you have become.
2. Open with five slow breaths.
3. Anoint yourself — oil on the wrists, water on the forehead, perfume on the heart. Your choice.
4. Read your Identity Statement aloud, three times. The third time, slower.
5. Read aloud a list of who you no longer are.
6. Read aloud a list of who you are now.
7. Photograph the moment. Not for social media. For you. For the day you forget.
8. Close with: “I am the woman I have been becoming. She is here.”

EMBODIMENT PRACTICE

Allow at least an unhurried hour for this ceremony. It is the apex of the journey.

TODAY'S AFFIRMATION

“I have not arrived. I have returned.”

Future-Self Letter & Integration

Twenty-one days are not enough to change a life. They are enough to begin one. Today, you write a letter from the woman you will be one year from today — and you seal it. You will open it on Day 365.

HOW TO WRITE THE LETTER

- Date a fresh page exactly one year from today.
- Write to yourself from the woman you will be then. Tell her what you are most proud of.
- Tell her what surprised you, what you released, what you built.
- Tell her thank you.
- Seal the letter. Mark the date on your calendar. Keep your promise to open it.

BEGIN HERE

The 21 Becoming Affirmations

Tear out, photograph, screenshot, or transcribe into your phone. One for every day of the journey, and a lifetime of mornings beyond it.

Day 1. I am allowed to set down what was never mine to carry.

Day 2. I am the first person I owe an apology to. And I have already begun to make it right.

Day 3. What I have grieved has not weakened me. It has shaped me.

Day 4. My body is not the enemy. She is the messenger I have been ignoring.

Day 5. I am no longer waiting to be chosen, allowed, or invited. I am the chooser now.

Day 6. The inner critic is a borrowed voice. I am rebuilding the one that is mine.

Day 7. What I have laid down does not get to follow me into who I am becoming.

Day 8. I am the woman my 9-year-old self was waiting for.

Day 9. My dreams are not behind me. They are buried, not dead. And I am the one with the shovel.

Day 10. I am not waiting to be beautiful. I am beautiful, and I am finally paying attention.

Day 11. I am rewriting the money story I inherited. The pen is finally in my hand.

Day 12. Pleasure is not the reward for finishing my list. It is the architecture of a life worth finishing.

Day 13. The friend I have been waiting for has arrived. She lives in me.

Day 14. Nothing I have called home will leave me again.

Day 15. I no longer need to be introduced. I introduce myself now.

Day 16. My boundaries are not punishments. They are the walls of the home I am building inside myself.

Day 17. I am no longer performing wellness. I am living rhythms that sustain the woman I am becoming.

Day 18. My body is not a problem to fix. She is my home, my ally, and my oldest friend.

Day 19. My hours and my dollars are voting for the woman I am becoming.

Day 20. My legacy is not what I will be remembered for. It is who I become while I am still here.

Day 21. I have not arrived. I have returned.

Your Identity Statement

Refined from Day 15. Read aloud before any hard conversation, any speaking engagement, any decision that requires you to remember who you are now.

TWENTY DRAFTS — “I AM A WOMAN WHO...”

1.

2.

3.

4.

5.

6.

7.

8.

9.

10.

11.

12.

13.

14.

15.

16.

17.

18.

19.

20.

YOUR WORKING IDENTITY STATEMENT (30 WORDS)

The Boundaries Script Library

Five scripts for the five conversations every woman in becoming eventually has. Adapt the wording to your voice. Practice each aloud before you deliver it.

SAYING NO WITHOUT EXPLANATION

"Thank you for thinking of me. That's not something I can take on right now." Stop talking. Do not explain. Smile if you mean it.

RENEGOTIATING AN OLD DYNAMIC

"I've noticed [the pattern]. Going forward, what I need is [the new term]. I'm sharing this because the relationship matters and I want it to keep working."

PROTECTING YOUR MORNING

"My mornings are not available for [calls / requests / problem-solving]. I'll be back to you after [time]. Thank you for understanding."

NAMING A HURT WITHOUT ESCALATING

"When [specific thing] happened, I felt [emotion]. I'm telling you because I want us to do this differently. Can we?"

ENDING A CONVERSATION THAT IS NO LONGER HEALTHY

"This isn't a conversation I'm going to keep having. I love you / I respect you / I'm grateful for what we've had, and I need this to end here."

WHAT IS NEXT

The Becoming Continues

*You have not arrived. You have returned.
And the woman you have just become deserves a container that will keep holding her.*

If The Becoming opened a door, The Sanctuary is the room beyond it — a twelve-week intimate group container with Dr. Lori. Daily voice notes, weekly live calls, monthly 1:1, the full Revitalize & Thrive Masterclass Series, and a circle of women walking the same path. Spaces are intentional and limited.

Apply at revitalize.gumroad.com · or visit lccrichards.github.io/revitalize-and-thrive-now

you are not broken. you are becoming.

© Dr. Lori Alexander · Revitalize and Thrive Now · All Rights Reserved · No Refunds, All Sales Final